Hart Denies 'Immoral' Acts, Vows to Continue Candidacy

NEW YORK - Gary Hart, making his first public appearance since a press report accused him of expending the night with a young roman, denounced the story Tuesday as "misleading and false" and sowed to continue his campaign for the presidency.

Significant questions remained about the incident as it was reported Sunday in The Herald and as it has been explained by Mr. Hart and his associates.

The major point of contention was whether the reporters who staked out Mr. Hart's town house had missed the departure of the young woman. The Hart camp says that Ms. Rice, a television actress and model from Miami, left by the rear entrance at a time that The Herald acknowledges only the front door was being watched.

In Monday's editions, The Herald noted: "There were opportuni-ties between approximately mid-night and 5 A.M. for her to depart undetected via the unwatched rear entrance" of Mr. Hart's town house. And no reporters watched the house between 3 A.M. and 5 A.M., the newspaper said.

The former Colorado senator, whose campaign has been fighting off rumors of womanizing, told The Herald on Saturday that Ms. Rice was a "friend of a friend."

Mr. Hart criticized news organizations in an interview in Tuesday's editions of the Denver Post. "I'm really angry and it's not good to talk while you're angry," he said. " Pve been victimized.

Barbie's Prosecutors Agree on a Strategy

They Hope to Avert a Trial of the Resistance

By Julian Nundy

ral Herald Tribum PARIS - In November, 1943, the World War II allies, meeting in Moscow, vowed to follow Nazi war criminals "to the uttermost ends of the Earth."

At that time, a middle-ranking Schutzstoffel officer was carving out the reputation that was, nearly 40 years later, to earn his expulsion from exile in Bolivia and a flight back to his wartime base, the central French city of Lyon.

On Monday, the former SS captain Klans Barbie, known as the "butcher of Lyon," will sit: behind a glass screen in the city's main courtroom for what certainly will be the most spectacular trial in modern France and probably the country's last major war crimes case.

About 3,000 people are expected to converge on the city for the trial, and the courthouse in Lyon, the city considered the center of resistance against the Germans, has been remodeled for the occasion.

Barbie, 73, was sentenced to death twice in the 1950s in his absence for specific war crimes. France's statute of limitations rendered these sentences ineffective after 20 years.

Now, he faces the charge of "crimes against humanity," a charge used to cover genocide and racial persecution to which no statute of limitations applies. With capital punishment abolished in France, he faces a maximum sentence

It is a trial in which Barbie's defense counsel, Jacques Verges, has threatened to confront the French with their own record of collaboration with the Nazi occupiers.

Representing various victims, Jewish and non-Jewish, from Communists to rightists, they say they have worked out a strategy to keep the trial angled on the facts of atrocities committed under Barbie's authority.

Mrs. Lesèvre, whose son and husband died in deportation, was interrogated by Barbie and his lieutenants for 19 days in 1944. She is expected to be among the first witnesses called to the stand after the trial's opening.

Another member of the Resistance, Raymond Aubrac, has described regaining consciousness after bouts of torture.

"Sometimes, coming round, I would see him with a woman on his knees, with lipstick on his shirt," Mr. Aubrac said. "He liked to demonstrate his power."

Mr. Vergès said that the presence of Communist lawyers made it almost certain that Barbie's recruitment by the Counter Intelligence Corps in the U.S. zone in Germany after the war would come under attack.

De Gaulle had entrusted him with a liaison role between the various resistance groups to coordinate the struggle against the Germans. Mr. Vergès claims that Moulin committed

The trial of Klaus Barbie is likely to be one of the final sparks from the embers of the Nazi past. Barbie is 73, and death has severely depleted the ranks of what the leaders of

But Jewish groups are hoping the trial will shed new light on the period and intensify efforts to track down hundreds of alleged World War II criminals, younger and less

"The actuarial tables suggest we will not see many more trials like Barbie's," said Elan Steinberg, executive director of the World Jewish Congress in New York.

Although some notorious Nazi officials may still be alive, there is ittle chance of their capture. Mr. Steinberg said Barbie, whose role as a Gestapo officer in Lyon is not "The big names — they've most-died off," Mr. Steinberg said. But these atrocities were not committed by a handful. The vast mawill not be punished. We estimate about 10,000 war criminals entered the United States alone."

World War II in its final days was a young man's war, and many of the mass murderers of 1944 and 1945 are grandfathers in their midto late 60s living obscure lives in the United States, Canada, Australia and Western Europe, according to Rabbi Marvin Hier. to Rabbi Marvin Hier.

Rabbi Hier, dean of the Yeshiva University in Los Angeles, which houses the Simon Wiesenthal Center for Holocaust Studies, said that many of these men committed crimes far worse than those that Mr. Barbie has been accused of. "There were 225,000 Jews in bi said. "At the end of the war there were 2,000 or 3,000 left. It was the Nazis' most successful operation in terms of the percentage of Jews Among those who managed to slip into Western countries as displaced persons and refugees from communism were men like Karl Linnas, 67, who faces the prospect of a firing squad after being stripped of his U.S. citizenship and deported to the Soviet Union on April 21. The Soviet Union condetimed him to death 25 years ago for atrocities committed while manding a concentration camp n his native Estonia.

John Demjanjuk, accused in an emotional trial in Israel of being a sadistic guard at the Treblinka concentration camp, and Andrija Artukovic, under sentence of death in Yugoslavia for ordering mass killings and deportations, also were deported by the United States after ing stripped of their citizenship. Many such cases are now going through the courts as a result of work begin in 1979 by the U.S. Justice Department's special de-partment for investigating Nazi war crimes. The department is investigating 525 people, a spokes-man said. Twenty-six of them face deportation because they lied to immigration officials about their Nazi pasts, and a dozen of those could be returned to the Soviet Union, as was Linnas.

Mr. Hier said it was a "mockery" that only about 6,000 Nazis have ever been sentenced for war crimes while "tens of thousands of murderers escaped without a trace." About seven months ago, the Simon Wiesenthal Center obtained previously confidential Red Cross records identifying the destination of about 11 million postwar refu-

A comparison of these records with various other lists of wanted Nazis has enabled the center to narrow the search by indicating where war criminals sought refuge after the war.

Mr. Hier said the center has given the names of 242 suspected Nazi criminals to the U.S., Australian, Canadian, West German and British governments, and added he was hopeful the lists would yield hundreds of more names.

But even if any of these cases eventually come to justice, they are unlikely to have the same emotional impact as the trial of Barbie, which has been described as involving the conscience of a nation. Even if there are people who did things far worse than what is alleged about Barbie, I'd have to say his trial is important," Mr. Hier L "It involves a whole country and I think it will help the worldwide awareness of the need for justice. I hope so, because biologically we are at the last hurdle." The tragedy is that we have waited so long," said Mr. Steinberg of the World Jewish Congress. "An abundance of evidence has piled up over the past 40 years. The greater tragedy is the lack of will by gov-eruments to do anything about it." In Jerusalem, Menachem Fogel, a spokesman for the Holocaust Memorial Center, said he hoped Barbie's trial would increase awareness of the need for justice and the need to set the historical record straight. Mr. Fogel added: "For us, there is no statute of limitations. As long as one of these Nazi criminals is left alive, he or she needs to be hunted down and brought to trial." Auschwitz Guard on Trial A former guard at the Auschwitz concentration camp went on trial Tuesday, charged with six counts of murder and participation in mass shootings, Reuters reported from Siegen, West Germany. Ernst-August Koenig, 68, who was in charge of a block at Auschwitz, denies the charges. The crimes are alleged to have been committed

Rabat, Algiers Agree to Sahara Talks

OUIDA, Morocco (Reuters) — Morocco and Algeria have agreed to talks on their 11-year-old conflict over the Western Sahara, senior.

Moroccan sources said Tuesday. The breakthrough was achieved with the help of King Fahd of Sandi, Arabia, who set up talks in Oujda between King Hassam II of Morocco and President Chadli Benjedid of Algeria. The Polisario Front, backed by Algeria, has been fighting Morocco since 1976 for the independence of Western Sahara, a former Spanish colony. Both sides have reported bloody battles with hundreds of casualties in the last three months. Morocco and Algeria agreed to "pursue meetings between the two brotherly countries to resolve problems in abeyance," they said in a joint communique. They said the meeting had broken the deadlock and laid the basis for a political dialogue and a "pragmatic approach" to the

Karami Affirms Intention to Resign

BEIRUT (Reuters) — Prime Minister Rashid Karami of Lebanoh esisted Syrian pressure Tuesday and reiterated his determination to esign, a Syrian official said.

Syria's military intelligence chief in Lebanon, Brigadier Ghazi Kanaan, met with Mr. Karami at his home in West Beirut and said he had tried to persuade the Moslem official to change his mind. "But I saw he was determined to resign because he faced a dead end," Brigadier Kanaan

Mr. Karami announced Monday that he was stepping down because rival Christian and Moslem leaders had not been able to agree on a formula to end Lebanon's 12-year-old civil war.

UN Talks on Afghanistan Delayed

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AFP) — The UN-sponsored talks between Afghanistan and Pakistan on a timetable for withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan will not resume in Geneva this month as had be anticipated. Western diplomats said here Tuesday. They gave no new date for the talks.

The UN intermediary, Diego Cordovez, had announced at the ad-umment of the talks in March that he believed they would resume here his month. But the diplomate quoted Kabul sources as saying that the negotiations would not resume this month.

The previous session stalled on the question of bridging a gap between the positions of the two countries on the key issue of a tim Soviet withdrawal of an estimated 120,000 troops from Afghanistan.

It identified them as Gladys Oliva García Hernandez, a Cuban exile from Miami who is a U.S. citizen, and Nestor Garcia Hernandez, who works for the Ministry of Construction in Cuba. There was no immediate comment from Washington. The Cuban government alleged that the woman recruited her brother for the CIA during a family visit, and had instructed him in espionage and sabotage techniques.

The Interior Ministry said the two were arrested while "carrying out espionage activities against our country as agents of the Central Intelligence Agency of the U.S."

Vienna Meeting on Security Kesumes

VIENNA (Renters) — The Vienna European Security conference resumed negotiations Tuesday with Western countries pressing for action on human rights and the Soviet bloc insisting on the need for greater military security.

The 35 states in the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Euro are due to prepare a final document to further collaboration by July 31, and most delegatious are hoping to stick to that deadline.

About 140 proposals have been so far put forward since the conference started in November and the West has concentrated on humanitarian issues. East bloc states have proposed a second round of the Stockholm conference on European disarmament, which in September produced an accord on confidence-building measures, including exchange of information on military maneuvers.

Support for Waldheim Is Explained

VIENNA (AP) - The chancellor of Austria, Franz Vranitzky, has declared he threw his support behind President Kurt Waldheim "so that the existence of our state is not threatened." Mr. Waldheim has been barred from entering the United States by the U.S. Justice Department.

Mr. Vranitzky made the statement after a cabinet meeting on Tuesday; a day after Mr. Waldheim announced plans to take legal action against unidentified people in the United States and Austria.

Meanwhile, Profil, a weekly magazine published in Vienna on Monday, said the United States decided to bar Mr. Waldheim after his signature was reportedly found on Nazi anti-Jewish propaganda.

TRAVEL UPDATE

Air France pilots will be called out on strike May 10-14 because negotiations with the company over their demands about flying conditions linked to the introduction of the short-hand Airbos A320 have broken down, a union spokesman said. Air France management said around 30 flights a day would be affected if pilots at Paris airports followed the strike call. New discount fares from London's Luton Airport to Amsterdam and

Brussels are to be offered starting May 22 by London European Airways PLC, the carrier said Monday. Britain has withdrawn its long-standing objection to Spain's member-ship of the European air traffic organization Euro-Control, the Gibraltar Chronicle newspaper said Tuesday, quoting Keith Mack, the head of Britain's air traffic systems.

Flights and shipping in Cyprus were disrapted Tuesday by strikes called in support of about 9,000 clothing workers who remained off the job for a second day.

The Rolex Awards for Enterprise were conceived in 1976 to provide help and encouragement in breaking new ground in the fields of Applied Sciences and Invention, Exploration and Discovery, and the Environment.

Since 1976, Rolex has awarded 20 individuals who have demonstrated a remarkable spirit of enterprise and commitment in their fields of endeavour.

An international panel of judges, in granting the Awards, has helped to bring to fruition many projects that might otherwise not have been realised.

Each of the five current winners, announced in Geneva on 30th April 1987, has received 50,000 Swiss Francs. Also, each winner has been presented with a specially inscribed gold Rolex Chronometer, itself a symbol of enterprise and achievement.

MEDICAL AID FOR THE INDIAN OCEAN ARCHIPELAGOS.

To people cut off by the sea, a medical emergency is an emergency indeed. The islanders of the Maldives archipelago in the Indian Ocean, for example, may have to travel five days by boat to see a doctor. Jacques Autran and his colleague, a doctor, understood the problem from years of navigating in MCQUES AUTRAN various archipelagos. Their first step was to set up Marins sans Frontières. Their second was to acquire an appropriate boat. They found it: the Listans, a motor fishing vessel, bought for her worth as scrap metal.

It took four years to clean, rebuild and equip the Listaes, using volunteers and salvaged materials. She now carries a small or ying theatre, a pharmacy with cold storage for vaccines, and a well-equipped laboratory. Listaw will anchor off a Maldivian island reef, where doctors and nurses will set up a light dispensary on shore. Local health workers will then be trained to continue the work when the Listacs has sailed on, perhaps to Madagascar or the Mauritius archipelago - wherever island dwellers need Autran's imaginative and humanitarian enterprise.

Few entomologists are able to collect their insects from high mountain regions. But Pierre Morvan is a veteran mountain climber who practises wrestling to keep fit. As the number of professional entomologists declines, competent amateurs such as Morvan play an increasingly important role. His achievements are the more remarkable because he finished his schooling at the age of fourteen.

The processes that help to form biological species (speciation) are Morvan's special interest, with particular reference to ground beetles. Speciation is the result of an animal populations becoming isolated by some factor, usually geographic in the first place. Once geographically isolated, a population group will develop its own specific characteristics.

For these reasons, the most valuable studies are done where the ecology and topography are highly varied and where there is a species that readily changes its form. Morvans speciality, the ground beetles (Carabidae), meet these criteria well.

His project is to study a subfamily of the Carabidae that undergoes intense speciation. His chosen site is the southern Himalayas, where the density of geographic isolation factors is high but knowledge of the fauna is still limited. (FRANCE)

A BUDDHIST PERSPECTIVE ON NATURE CONSERVATION.

Nancy Nash believes it is not enough to focus on biological problems and technical solutions in response to the world's crisis of disappearing nature. She feels that we are overlooking the cultural and social factors which have not only created the problem but which could also help provide a long-term solution to it.

The need for an environmental ethic caused Nash to consider Buddhist teachings, which seek to instil respect for all forms of life.

EXPLORING SACRED RUINS HIGH IN THE ANDES.

The world's highest ruins by far are found in the southern Andes. Nearly one hundred sites, predating the Spanish invasion of 1532, have been found above 5,200m - with some well-built structures up to 6,700m. They constitute one of the most awesome accomplishments that have survived from ancient Being almost inaccessible, only a few of these sites have been examined by anthropologists. Their origins, distribution and purpose were largely conjectured before Johan Reinhard began work in 1980. He has developed a subfield of anthropology; called highaltitude archaeology. Strangely, diving is one of his specialised techniques, for mountain lakes were often perceived as doors into the mountains where the gods dwelt.

Reinhard's findings indicate that mountain gods were believed to control the weather and, consequently, crop and animal fertility. The hypothesis - which his project is designed to test - is that the Incas built the sacred sites to help increase production, thereby strengthening the Inca state and its religion.

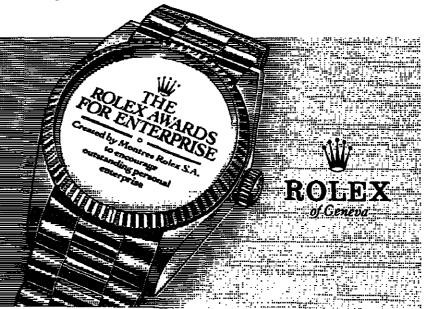

Reinhard's pioneering techniques in high altitude archaeology will greatly increase understanding of traditional Andean religio-economic beliefs and ancient religious sites.

A book about The Rolex Awards for Enterprise will be available in the spring of 1987, either from bookshops or from the publishers, Van Nostrand Reinhold. It will give full details of the projects of the five Laureates as well as 238 other projects selected from the many submitted, including 32 that were accorded Honourable Mentions. Focusing on Reagan

"What did the president know and when did he know it?" The 1973 Watergate hearings were already a month old when Senator Howard Baker, now President Reagan's chief of staff, coined the expression while cross-examining Richard Nixon's prime accuser, John Dean. The question resounded not only because of its ring but also its reach. America was watching.

The same question hangs in the air this week as Congress launches its Iran-coutra hearings. Whatever they disclose — facts and feelings - will once more be vastly magnified, for again America will be watching.

Already the Senate chairman, Daniel Inouye, has come remarkably close to charging the president with not only responsibility but guilt. The president knew, says the senator, that money was being raised to buy weapons for the contras in Nicaragua. But did he know that his White House staff was raising money for weapons when Congress had forbidden it and permitted at most humanitarian aid? Mr. Reagan says he knew only generally that his subordinates were rallying private contributions for television ads supporting his Central American policies.

Is the president splitting hairs, and even if he is, why make such a fuss about it? Because it is his constitutional duty to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed," including laws he does not like or wants to ignore. At a minimum, President Reagan failed to control his administration's attempts to circumvent Congress's ban on contra weapons. It is clear also that he deceived the public by sternly declaring a policy of no ransom for hostages while privately trading arms with Iran. His best defenses so far are negligence, ignorance, forgetfulness and perhaps self-deception. Each represents a failure to "take care."

Senator Incurve and others resist forecasts more dramatic than that only half the Irancontra story has yet been told. They seem prepared to educate the public on the contra and Mideast irregularities and to search for the legal norms that are supposed to prevent them. The task is formidable, not least because the questioners will include I I senators and 15 representatives - compared with seven who asked the Watergate questions. For all the complexity and the rivalry, the magnifying glass finally will focus on one simple, awful question. Beyond what he knew, and when, it is: Does the president of the United States think he is above the law? - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Yes, Women Rotarians

The United States Constitution guarantees the right of free association. But the laws prohibit various forms of discrimination. What to do when these two great principles collide, when people choose to associate in a discriminatory way? In 1984 the Supreme Court ventured into this muddy area in a case involving the Jaycees. That organization had a rule against admission of women. The state of Minnesota had a public accommodations law barring discrimination on various grounds, including sex. The Minneapolis-St. Paul Jaycees chapter decided to admit women, and the national Jaycees organization tried to lift its charter. The court said the national group could not do it.

To reach their decision, the justices distinguished among various kinds of association. Among other things they suggested that the smaller the group and more private its purposes, the greater its freedom to exclude. They also said that religious groups and groups exercising free speech have particular protection. The Jaycees, they concluded, were none of these and therefore fair game. Now the court has reaffirmed that decision in a case involving Rotary clubs. There are about 20,000 of these around the world, with about 900,000 members. They are basically, like the Jaycees chapters, service organizations that can also provide members with useful business contacts. The rules of Rotary International are that membership is open only to men. A defiant California chapter admitted three women; the international organization tried to revoke its charter, it resisted, citing a state public accommodations law. Rotary said the state law infringed on the First Amendment.

Maybe it "does work some slight in-fringement on Rotary members' right of expressive association," the justices said, but "that infringement is justified because it serves the state's compelling interest in eliminating discrimination against women."

Clearly that is so. The standards the court laid down in 1984 were sensible then and remain so. The Rotarians should grow up. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

A NATO Weapons Agency

NATO's European members need a central agency to administer the research and procurement of standard weapons. The West is not short of innovation. But there is a desperate shortage of consistent, stable management of multinational programs.

A major obstacle to establishing a central entity to administer such programs is that the creation of new weapons is synonymous with clout. It is a way for politicians to be seen as decisive. Enemies are cautioned: jobs are created; and billions of pounds, marks and francs are poured into the effort. Governments are loath to surrender that kind of power. One solution is to establish the A new generation of ar NATO agency below the political level — 10 dently of the Pentagon. implement major decisons, not make them.

A report prepared for NATO's Independent European Program Group proposes a research and procurement office to be operated much like the European Space Agency. its operations are funded on a percentage basis by the countries that benefit from its work. At present, every nation that buys a NATO weapon wants a share of its production. A central agency could parcel out the work based on open competition without regard to national borders.

Some discourage talk of such a NATO agency for fear it would become a tough competitor to the United States and be a divisive factor within the alliance. That is a false issue. Europeans already are devising a new generation of armaments indepen-

The Reagan-Nakasone Summit Has Come to Nothing

N EW YORK.—As the dust set-tles from Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's trip to Washington, it can be appraised for what it was: a sad demonstration of the impotence of political leadership on both sides of the Pacific. Never mind the expressions of friendship and the short-term agreements to cooperate on setting interest rates. They will have no substantial impact on the huge economic imbalances between the two countries.

More important, there is a lesson in the wasted pomp and circum-stance: Theater and rhetoric will car-ry government leaders only so far. This was ironic because the lar, dynamic and in tune with modern to inflation, in part because imports imperatives - Mr. Reagan, the marwill become more expensive and in ket man, Mr. Nakasone, the internapart because there will be pressure to tionalist. But the Iran-contra scandal keep interest rates high in order to has undercut Mr. Reagan's ability to attract foreign capital. This would provide effective national leadership, including his ability to fashion a forward-looking trade policy with Congress And Mr. Nakasone was severely wounded by the defeat of his tax proposals at home.

Both men have lived in a Disneyland of showmanship that has helped foster the very problems we now face.

"magic of the marketplace" has been seductive, but what he really has done is sponsor loose budgets and tight money, which have led to the trade and budget deficits that have become the nation's No. 1 problem.

And his quick fixes — quotas on imported machine tools, chip cartels and deliberate debasement of the dollar - may have sounded tough, but they all backfired, and now they are leading to more cockeyed ploys like the Gephardt amendment, just passed by the House, which would force America into an era of precipitous trade retaliation.

Prime Minister Nakasone, too, has had moments of flim-flam. His cheerleading sessions to get Japanese consumers to buy foreign goods were President Reagan's promotion of the well-intended, even courageous. His friendship with Mr. Reagan became his principal political asset. But more valuable than international show-manship would have been his convincing his countrymen that their markets should be opened and their domestic economic engines should be used to help power world growth.

The two men are proof that, in a world so tightly linked by economics and technology, those in charge must be able to deal on both domestic and foreign fronts at the same time.

Mr. Reagan may have had a touch for boosting domestic growth, but his neglect of the global dimension has brought another set of problems. Thus, for example, he pushed for higher gross national product levels with easier money and tax reductions, seemingly oblivious to the flood of imports or the half-a-trilliondollar debt building up to foreigners. In another case, the administration drove a hard deal with Latin Ameriobjects to Japan's trade practices, can debts, forgetting that strangling The West European countries are Latin economies meant cutting back

In addition, he has never fully obtained the cooperation of his own bureaucrats. which means that his foreign policy initiatives never have achieved the credibility they needed to work.

Whatever chance there might have been for constructive alternatives to the present quagmire is now over, at least until a new president is up and running. Mr. Reagan is a lame duck. Mr. Nakasone is likely to be replaced well before Mr. Reagan retires, but the slow, consensus building process in Japan, plus Tokyo's deep-seated reluctance to take initiatives on its own, ensures that Japan will wait for 1989 before doing anything dramatic. Now the challenge for both governments will be damage limitation. For Washington, this means controlling the worst aspects of protectionism, including watering down the Gephardt amendment, trying to pre-vent a free fall of the dollar and deflecting a broad anti-Japanese backlash in America. For Tokyo, the need is to avoid the kind of protectionist acts for which the Japanese are infamous, and at least not to backslide on the more recent promises for faster growth, more imports and increased foreign aid.

Meanwhile, unrestrained market forces will rule by default. For America, now the world's largest debtor, the driving force will be the need to attract Japanese funds at reasonable rates. That objective will determine how the country manages interest rates and the dollar, costing it much of its economic independence

Moreover, no amount of protectionist fire and smoke on Capitol Hill will stop the Japanese trade and investment juggernaut. With trade sur, pluses exceeding $100 billion lasyear, and with cumulative overseas investment having doubled between 1985 and 1986, Japan has built up too much momentum. Tokyo's exports to the United States will slow under exchange rate pressures, but Japan will own or finance a lot of the other Asian goods that come to America.

Meanwhile, Japanese purchases of U.S. industrial and financial companies, Japanese plants on U.S. soil and new partnerships with Japanese technological companies will accelerate. Perhaps this is acceptable if Americans can figure out how not to become little more than a nation of assemblers, distributors and marketers for Japan's increasingly skilled work force. But the outlook is not good. Left alone, the markets will not deal gently with Tokyo either. Already the Japanese stock market resembles a speculative bubble ready to explode. The skyrocketing yen may soon become as big a shock to the Japanese economy as the fourfold increase in oil prices in the 1970s. disrupting production, forcing industry to relocate overseas and decimating the small business sector.

The problems are deep and almost intractable, but it should not be too much to ask that the next set of administrations in Washington and Tokyo be more effective than those we now have. At the least, they should not be as irrelevant.

The Last Time Around, U.S.-Japanese Feuding Ended Badly

By William Pfaff

P ARIS — The economic conflict between Japan and the United States has something familiar about it; something like this has happened before. In the 1920s and '30s, Japan's incomprehension of intellectual and political attitudes in other countries combined with Western resentment of Japanese rivalry to produce trage-dy for everyone. The sources of that tragedy ment the most serious reflection by all those making policy today. Washington again is bullying Ja-pan, and Japan again has invited the bullying. Its record of restrictions on foreign business and imports is well known, and also of condescending lies told about them, and promises unkept.

A kind of racism has scarcely been concealed: America is a "mongrel" because it is multiracial, while the Japanese are thoroughbreds; foreigners in general are rather crude and slow-thinking creatures with "fat fingers," unfit for precision thought or work evil-smelling and large-nosed barbar-ians, as an older formulation had it.

Japanese can seem pretty peculiar to Westerners too, but it is no longer thought courteous to say so. Such attitudes toward foreigners are universal; but one has the impression that in Japan little effort is devoted by the nation's leadership to Treasury secretary, Donald Regan, is remembered for telling West German officials, of the dollar, that "it's our going beyond these caricatures toward a truer appreciation of other currency and your problem."

The domestic political obstacles to change are well known, but Japan cannot indefinitely demand to profit from an international trading system that in important respects, in its own markets, it fails to respect.

This seems insufficiently understood even now. There is serious risk that European and American indignation at Japan's conduct will produce. in Japan, not change but incompre-hension and ultimately retaliation. As Japanese investment now finances America's deficit, the means for retaliation, so far as the United States is concerned, are certainly at hand.

Africans Need Help in Their Bold Bid for Reform

U NITED NATIONS, New York — In dra-matic moves, several African nations have been adopting bold and politically risky economnia to Zambia, and from the Congo to Mozambique, the state is easing the hold it has exercised since the 1960s on economic activity. These reforms are widely considered indispensable to the revival of growth on the continent. But the Western nations that pushed for such reforms, and which pledged to support them at a United Nations session on Africa last May, have given little sign of planning to furnish the resources these programs need if they are to succeed.

"Country after country in the sub-Saharan region has come up with comprehensive reform packages," said Edward Jaycox, a World Bank ic reforms. From Ghana to Guinea, from Tanza-vice president. Reforms enacted by 22 countries "have qualified them to receive funds from our special facility set up for that purpose." But officials say these nations are not receiving support in moving toward more open markets. The intensity and direction of reform vary. But across the continent, countries increasingly are: • Raising the prices they pay farmers for food

(in order to boost production).

• Cutting back on government regulation of the economy (to allow market forces to determine prices and allocation of resources).

 Slashing public spending and employment (to balance the budget and redirect investment).
 And devaluing their currencies (to remove price distortions and increase rural incomes). These measures are expected to free up the most productive sectors in society, to encourage greater private initiative and to have investment Countries like Ghana, Tanzania and Guinea, once critical of such prescriptions, are now applying them vigorously. At least partly as a result such countries have seen large increases in food production, exports and manufactured goods. But in the short run, millions of poor city dwellers may face intense suffering as food prices rise, wages fall, and governments lay off workers and reduce social services to trim spending. These are not easy sacrifices in Africa, the world's poorest region and the only one where incurnes for the poor have fallen since 1962.

Hence there are political risks. Zambia was rocked by rioting in December, when the government doubled the price of maize meal, and President Kenneth Kaunda was forced to roll back what was being hailed as a model reform program. Wilfried Thalwitz, a World Bank vice president, argues that without increased donor assistance, many African economies "just cannot respond to what are otherwise excellent new policies." The World Bank, the UN system and other multilateral institutions are making special efforts to raise money for such assistance. But the evidence on bilateral support, which accounts for a much larger volume of aid, is not encouraging.

Washington has cut its economic aid to Africa by one-fourth, and there is a fear that other donors may follow suit. Adebayo Adedeji, the executive secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa, noted that "there is as yet little evidence of concrete international measures" to support reform. Richard Jolly, UNICEF deputy executive director, speaking after a recent meeting of African planning ministers in Addis Ababa, said he was struck by the seriousness with which governments had followed up on the commitments they made at the UN special session last year.

"The people of the continent are recovering from a famine which devastated and set back millions of lives, and they are now being asked by their leaders to make even more sacrifices," he said. "I wish more developed-country represents tives had been there to see what is going on."

Unfortunately, some donors remain skeptical of the reforms. There is a perception that "the African crisis" is over. Many of those who responded with generosity to the recent famines are unaware that the underlying causes are still very much in place: low commodity prices, high debt and problems with the flow of resources.

There is an intense struggle being played out in Africa. If the reform movement falters in a few key countries, the process will lose credibility across the continent. Economic growth and deve will be set back. The richer countries have little time left to commit the aid needed to back reforms they have been urging on Africa for years.

Debt: Politics for Politicians, Banking for Bankers

N EW YORK — Negotiations between the world's major banks and less developed countries, mostly in Latin America, have become a more or less constant feature of the economic landscape. Countries like Brazil, which seemed in good shape a year or two ago, may now be strug-gling to put their houses in order; equally, countries like Mexico, struggling a year or two ago, now seem to be in much better shape.

The rise or fall of a particular country's fortunes results from fac-tors within and outside its control. Brazil brought much of its misfortune on itself by converting an anti-infla-tion program, the Cruzado Plan, into a broad income-redistribution program. Wages were raised dramatically while prices were frozen, resulting in devastating shortages, reduced exports and impaired reserves.

Conversely, some factors are external. The prices of primary products (food, energy, minerals) are outside national control and remain abnormaily low. Indeed, as the management expert Peter Drucker has pointed out, they are at their lowest levels in recorded history relative to the price of manufactured goods — a situation that causes economic and financial distress not only in Latin America but also in Texas and Iowa.

Many politicians have developed a great urge to intervene. It would be nice to imagine that a bold new pro-gram could work. But political intervention could well make things worse. Some members of Congress propose that U.S. banks give a billion dollars to less developed countries through interest rate reductions and forgiveness of principal. This poses problems:

1. It would severely weaken the

For every dollar of debt forgiveness, the banks' lending capacity would be reduced by about $16. Substantial write-offs thus could have a devastating effect on the growth of the U.S. economy. 2. It is unlikely that America would recover such a remarkable gift through trade. Only a fraction of the mone saved on debt payments would be spent on purchases of American exports. Even it all of it were, the program is still a gift: If the United States gives away dollars to facilitate buying American goods, then it has, as a country, given away the goods.

3. This is by no means a U.S. issue exclusively or even primarily. American banks hold less than one-quarter of all bank debt from less developed countries, the balance being primarily in Europe and Japan. America cannot dictate a global solution, but its politicians seem to overlook this.

4. Most fundamentally, this proposal undermines the tedious but utterly necessary process of restructuring and adjustment in less developed countries. Banks work hard to help them develop sensible economic goals. Impatience with this process will undermine the long-term benefits of the process. If the rhetoric is wrong, what is the reality? What if the government does not intervene? Will everything be O.K.? The reality is diverse. Countries differ greatly and frequently change policies, so a sweeping global formula is almost certain to be wrong. Reality is case by case. Countries will try different strateLenders to Peru have experienced losses since 1985. But Peru is facing losses as well. It has lost access to the world's credit and payment system, and has been reduced to barter trade with the Soviet bloc. The stimulus of a short-term "quick fix" is giving rise to a much larger, longer-term cost. Mexico reached an important agreement with the lenders and the International Monetary Fund last year; everyone made some concessions, and the new IMF plan is more flexible and conducive to growth.

Within every less developed country there are voices of responsibility and voices of inesponsibility. The availability of a "political solution" encourages the least responsible parties. Once debt relief is offered via politicians, sensible economic give and take will tend to decline. The problem with political debt relief is this: Where does it stop? Does every country get some? Why shouldn't the less developed countries demand much more next year - and the year after?

And why stop at the less developed countries? Shouldn't primary pro-ducers in Texas and Iowa get debt relief, too? And if they get some, how about the "rust bowl" manufacturers? Why not hard-pressed municipalities and over-borrowed consumers? The fact is, no one likes to repay debts. If put to a vote, most everyone will vote against it. That is why the government is a poor forum to settle debt questions.

'We conducted ourselves in a professional manner throughout," said Heath Meriwether, the executive director of The Herald. If that is so, then American journalism is at the sordid English level mocked by Evelyn Waugh in "Scoop" and should give up its pretensions.

The American press is better than that. It works much harder than it used to at its serious function of checking on the business of government. The Miami Herald is a prime example. It won the Pulitzer Prize last month for early and important stories on President Reagan's arms sales to Iran and the funneling of profits to the Nicaraguan contras. Why should a respected newspaper act like Waugh's Daily Beast? Gary Hart's strange treatment of his birth date and family name invited attention to his character. I think there are reasons to question his judgment. But

T T HAS been 18 years and four elec-1 tions since Democratic Party reformers set about to transfer power in the nomination process from the bosses to the masses. The jerry-built system of direct election primaries and caucuses they concocted has created a new class of politicians who demonstrate their good sense by not running for president. The hoary New Hampshire joke -"How can I be sure about him for president? He's only been in my kitchen three times!" - is way out of date. The reformed system increasingly demands that candidates do things beneath the dignity of the office they are seeking, "It puts a premium on sitting in someone's living room and being a pleasant fellow, said Austin Ranney, a political science professor at the University of California at Berkeley. The loss of respect for privacy has exacted a terrible price in American politics. When anyone who runs for president knows that intimate details of his or her life will be shouted to the world, what sensitive person would run? What person sensitive to the needs of a spouse or children would run?

So what you can expect in a candidate for president these days is narcissism: an absorption in oneself and one's ambitions to the exclusion of ordinary human concerns. And yet we are surprised when a president does not bother to see his own grandchildren. The mythology persists. Our leaders must be good family men.

The devaluation of privacy leads politicians to do things they would not have done: to mention a family tragedy, for example, in order to show that they understand misfortune. The old decencies of reticence must give way.

Of course there are candidates who are not part of that trend. One I know is ernor Michael Dukakis of Massachu setts. He is reticent by nature. His candidacy will test whether a low-key style and thoughtful substance can work.

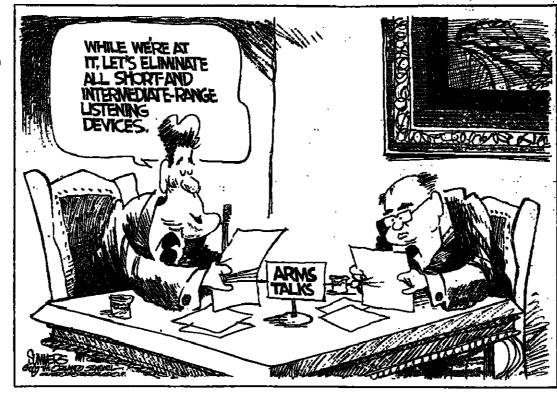

Maybe the shallow, insensitive nature of presidential campaigns would begin to change if one candidate, one day, said: "That is none of your business: that is my private life, and my family's." I think the public would respond to a candidate who said that and stuck to it. Meanwhile, the press ought to think about its role. Does it want to push political stories to the extreme of sensationalism? Or does it have some limiting sense of respect for the democratic process?

In this bicentennial year of the U.S. Constitution we can see one striking aspect of its history: The power of the president has grown beyond the imagination of the framers, reaching around the world and into every American home. But as the job has grown, the stature of so many of its occupants has seemed to shrink.

The way Americans choose presidents is a national disgrace and a cause of international concern. That is not the press's fault. But the Miami Herald stakeout of Gary Hart shows how the press can make it worse.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Begin, in the Beginning

Regarding the opinion article "Mena-chem Begin, for One, Did Not Duck the Burden" (April 29) by Richard Cohen:

I found this assessment of Menachem Begin deeply moving. If in fact Mr. Begin's behavior is that of a penitent, then, in accordance with the wonderful truth of Jewish tradition, the old man will find divine forgiveness.

I venture to hope that the former guer-rilia leader (Mr. Cohen's words) will also have repented of his notorious statement of April 9, 1948, following the massacre of some 250 Palestinians at Deir Yasin: "Accept my congratulations on this splendid act of conquest! As in Deir Yasin so everywhere we will attack. God, God, thou hast made us for victory.

Deir Yasin is just over the hill from the Yad va-Shem memorial to the Holocaust victims. For its former inhabitants, there is no memorial. The REVEREND A.A. MACINTOSH.

Arabs Must Help, Too Regarding "A Jordanian Appeal: American Jews Can Help" (April 20 and 21) by Mohamed Kamal:

Despite his friendly opening, the Jordanian ambassador displays a hostile mindset that cannot lead to peace. He says American Jews strive to "deny American support to any other country perceived as an enemy of Israel, even those countries that have enjoyed long and friendly ties with the United States, such as Saudi Arabia and Jordan," Yet such efforts by American Jews have been expressly limited to specific military matters and the Arab boycott of Israel, U.S. government statements and the positioning of U.S. naval forces belie the assertion that "as a result of pro-Israeli efforts, the United States has patently ignored or minimalized economic and strategic interests ... in the Middle East." He has Israelis "reacting so strongly to the memory of holocausts past that they fail to see the healing promise" of an Arab-Israeli peace. And he asks, "How is it that Jews who have suffered so much should be oblivious to the suffering of those displaced in the founding and sub-sequent expansion of Israel?" Yet in every aspect, the Jewish experience has enhanced sensitivity to the suffering of others and to the centrality of peace. Yes, Jews are sensitive to the suffering Arab refugees. But they also see the Arab role in the situation. Except for Jordan, no Arab country has given Pales-timan Arabs the choice of becoming citizens and leading normal lives. Arab refugees should have been afforded at least the same welcome by the rich Arab states as that which Israel extended to Jewish refugees from Arab lands. Arab irresponsibility is deeper than the failure to welcome refugees. The Arab world was profoundly silent as Arabs attacked Palestinian refugee camps not long ago. Rather than be concerned about how American Jews should try to change Israel, Arab leaders should become sensitive and open their hearts and homelands to the Arab refugees. Instead Scotland Is Not." The Press and Taiwan

James Clad's opinion column, "In Asia, Insecure Regimes Are Cracking Down Hard" (April 1) asks why it is that otherwise free and successful nations in East Asia are "cracking down" on reporters. He wonders why the paranoia exists despite the achievements of nations like Singapore, Taiwan and South Korea.

Jonathan Power's accompanying column, "Around the World, a Much-Maligned Press Needs a Chammion," answers this question. Mr. Power unwittingly provides a clue as to why the press is "maligned." He writes: "In Taiwan, after a yearlong government cam-paign, opposition publications have disappeared from newsstands."

That is false. Opposition publications are everywhere, in great variety and numbers. Need I say more about how Mr. Power answers Mr. Clad's query? By the way, the report by Patrick Smith in the same edition, "Resistance to Taiwan Reforms," was quite good. Good insights, good analysis.

Psychology locates the "real" reason for our seemingly pleasant desires and passions in the unexplored dark continents within us: Our pleasures are re-

Liberalism is especially good at turn-ing the gold of enjoyment into the lead of guilt: How can you enjoy that lasagna, knowing about Bangladesh? (Axiom: People are hungry there because people are nourished here.)

There will be time for frivolities (such as movies) when we have put behind us the risk/scandal/shame of acid rain/insider trading/offshore drilling. (Assumption: All society's shortcon are aberrational and hence optional.)

far as they go at making pleasure impossible. But Jared Diamond, who teaches physiology at UCLA medical school, goes all the way. He obliterates all enjoyment of everything. In an essay with a no-beating-around-the-bush title ("The Worst Mistake in the History of the Human Race") in Discover magazine, Mr. Diamond says that everything has been going irrevocably downhill since

Skeletons of Greek and Turkish hunter-gatherers indicate that modern Greeks and Turks still have not regained the average height of their hunter-gatherer ancestors.

The settled life of agriculture encouraged the growth of communities, which facilitated the spread of infectious diseases. Hunter-gatherers had no concentrated food sources, so they had no surpluses, and thus had a classless society. Agriculture produced disparities of wealth, and elites lording it over diseased masses. Women, who as huntergatherers had only the babies they could transport, were subjected to more preg-nancies to provide field hands.

Perhaps you are clinging to a fact that makes you feel good: Hunter-gatherers were so busy hunting and gathering that they had no time for culture - for the oleasure we derive from the Parthenon and the B-minor Mass. Mr. Diamond concedes that agriculture, by producing surpluses, made cities and culture possi-ble. But the cost has been considerable: starvation, disease, gross social and sexual inequality, tyranny, war.

So if anything is giving you pleasure, you do not understand. And if the fact that you don't understand doesn't disturb your serenity, we know why that is. Washington Post Writers Group.

Blame It All on Cheery Beer

MANY a debt-burdened farmer must be asking himself these days why his ancestors ever gave up the relatively carefree life of the hunter-gatherer. The answer, according to one anthropologist, is beer - which probably developed accidentally after uncultivated wheat or barley had been soaked in water to make gruel. Left out in the open, this mixture turned into a dark, somewhat carbonated beverage that was nutritious and made drinkers of it feel a little better. Violations At Embassies Not Limited To Marines

By Elaine Sciolino

The official, Robert E. Lamb, the assistant secretary of state for administration and security, said Monday that the diplomats might be reassigned or recalled.

He also said that the State Department and other U.S. agencies investigated more than 10 embassy staff members every year because of unauthorized socializing with foreign employees and residents. "By and large, career diplomats recognize overtures for what they are and report them," he said, "When an employee doesn't recognize them for what they are," Mr. Lamb said, "he or she will be investigated and transferred." Such cases are kept secret in accordance with privacy laws. But Mr. Lamb said secrecy was also important to avoid creating a climate in which employees would be afraid to admit unauthorized socializing.

The problem is more widespread than is generally acknowledged and extends far beyond the recent incident in which two Marine guards posted in Moscow have been charged with allowing Soviet agents into the most sensitive areas of the U.S. Embassy.

The Marines were reportedly involved with Soviet women who worked at the embassy.

"It's not just the Marines," Mr. Lamb said. "The Soviets will target anyone they can.'

Argentina and News Media Objectivity

Army Crisis Created Conflict Over Press, TV Coverage

By Shirley Christian . New York Times Service

BUENOS AIRES — Argentina's recent military crisis set off a conflict between the government of President Raul Alfonsin and the privately owned press over coverage and the way the government used television to rally support. The rebellions by army units also highlighted the near monopoly on television news by the government and its ownership of most provincial radio stations.

The state's dominant role in broadcast journalism developed during four decades of authoritarian governments, but leaders of privately owned television, radio and newspapers contend that such a position contradicts the new political democracy.

La Nación, a leading newspaper that usually supports President Alfonsin, said government influence over television and radio was "present in these days like a retardatory factor in our democratic maturity. It suggested that the continued existence of the state-owned networks had tempted the government into using them for propaganda purposes during the rebellions.

During the tensest days of the crisis, the main television channels regularly urged people to go to the Plaza de Mayo in the capital or to plazas in provincial towns to demonstrate support for the government. The phrase "Democracy or Dictatorship" flashed frequently across the bottoms of television praised the turnout and urged more people into the plazas. By contrast, there was very little television news coverage of the actions and demands of the rebellious officers.

Most of the coverage of the officers was by several privately owned radio stations in the capital and by newspapers and two news agencies which were criticized by the government and prominent members of the Radical Civic Union, the radio stations and one news agency had obtained interviews with Colonel Rico by telephone by calling the numbers listed in the telephone book for the infantry school at the Campo de Mayo.

While the crisis was under way, government representatives issued several appeals to the press not to report on the news conferences or proclamations of the rebel officers.

Julio Lopez, deputy director of press relations for the government, said in an interview Sunday that the government had also objected at the time to some press reports that the rebellion was spreading to units that, in fact, were not in rebel-

This Hart story, the womanizing story, presents a terrible dilemma to editors and reporters," said James P. Gannon, the editor of The Des Moines Register. That paper ran the story on Page 2 in Sunday's late editions and a follow-up story ran on the front page Monday.

"I personally find it distasteful that there's any need to have reporters watching the private lives of candidates or public officials, he said. "However it seems almost

Mozambique President Has Meeting With Pope

VATICAN CITY - President Joaquim Chissano of Mozambique met Pope John Paul II on Tuesday at the start of the Mozembican's first tour outside Africa since becoming head of state in November.

Officials accompanying Mr. Chissano said later that he was likely to have raised ways of improving Church-state relations in Mozambique and may have invited the pope to visit his country.

While most editors interviewed agreed that the story was legitimate, there were some voices of

"It's a dangerous area," said Albert Hunt, the Washington bureau chief of The Wall Street Journal. There is no doubt in my mind that one's sexual habits, particularly if one is married, say something about one's character. The problem is, I'm not sure that we in the press are qualified to analyze precisely what it does say about character."

Charles M. Madigan; national editor at the Chicago Tribune, suggested that the story might stir less interest around the country than it did in Washington

"In Washington," Mr. Madigan said, "there is a microscope or megaphone that is applied in cases where things are pretty common in our society. Thingsibecome mortal sins for which there is no forgive-

The story was carried prominently across the United States. In Mr. Hart's home state of Colorado, the story led both major newspapers, The Denver Post and the Rocky Mountain News.

The editor of The Denver Post, David Hall, said he had no problems with the methods of the Mi. ami Herald, which sent two reporters, two editors and a photographe to watch Mr. Harris Capitol Hill house after receiving a tip that he was going to spend the weekend there with a young woman.

"If you get that kind of information, what are you supposed to do, wait for a press release?" Mr. Hall

There was near unanimous agreement among editors and news executives of the potential import of the story.

Robert McFarland, an NBC vice president and the network's Washngton bureau chief said: "It's very important. Depending on what comes out, it could certainly cost him his nomination."

Editors said that the story was iustified not only because the Democratic front-runner's campaign had been bothered by the womanizing rumors, but because Mr. Hart had suggested that reporters check the allegations. In a New York Times Magazine cover story on Mr. Hart published Sunday, he was quoted as saying: "If anybody wants to put a tail on me, go ahead.

They'd be very bored." The executive editor of The Washington Post, Benjamin C. Bradlee, said, "He challenged the press to do what he is now complaining they did." '

Now the Helgolanders' traditional view of the Big Bang as a fiendish but incompetent plot to sink their "inde-structible island," as it is inevitably called in books and articles, is being challenged by one of their heroes.

A Star Turn Shylock

By Sheridan Morley

NTONY SHER returns to the Royal Shakespeare Company at Stratford for the first time since his spidery "Richard III" to offer a no-less-flamboyant Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice." Again his director is Bill Alexander, and again they have gone for an un-ashamed star turn that leaves the rest of the company at a considerable disadvantage. Whether it is that the RSC, now somewhat thinly spread across no less than nine Stratford and London stages, cannot muster enough character actors of stature, or simply that Sher, like Olivier before him, reduces most of his fellow players to mere specta-tors, only John Carlisle in the title role manages a performance that is even remotely in the same league.

Which is a pity, because beyond Sher's bearded and turbaned street trader in secured loans the production is hallmarked by a central and very strong notion of racial hatred. Beneath a Star of David, this Shylock chants Hebrew verses while a thuggish Venetian crowd Jew-baits him with truly Nazi fervor, and the news on the Rialto is of fear and loathing long before the trial scene. Deborah Findlay's Portia at Belmont and her casket-choosing princes are reduced to irreleva rustic interludes in a highly political drama. Few young contempo-

On the small Stratford stage at The Other Place, the RSC has a premiere of Václav Havel's new black comedy "Temptation," a Faustian allegory set in a police state. The satire here centers on Doctor Foustka, member of some nameless institute of science, who dabbles in black magic only to discover at the last that the old tramp he takes for his very own Mephistopheles is in fact also in the employ of the institute, thereby providing yet another instance of the power of the state. Havel's weird mix of pantonime, social satire and sexual fantasy is agilely directed by Roger Michell with John Shrapnel as the Faust figure, David Bradley as his Devil and Paul Webster as the no-less-sinister scientist at the head of the all-powerful and all-pervading institute.

Frederick Lonsdale is the route by which English drawing-room comedy got from Oscar Wilde to Noël Coward, and that alone gives the Albery Theatre revival of his 1929 "Canaries Sometimes Sing" a certain period curiosity. Like the infinitely sharper and better "Private Lives," written only a year later, it is a story of mixed marital doubles built in this case around a high-society playwright (Peter Bowles) hoping to be rid of his appallingly snobbish wife (Sylvia Syms) by palming her off on an aristocratic old schoolfriend (Neil Stacy) whose own ex-chorus-girl wife (Liz Robertson) he quite fan-

I suspect, an intriguing insecurity about his own craft, reputation, tal-ent and private life. But there's a low more of that between the lines than in them, and the director Patrick Garland seems to have persuaded both Bowles and Syms to play a creaking and desperately slow script as if it were a Shavian social tract, though Neil Stacy and Liz Robertson do get closer to Lons-dale's ineffable and long-lost air of clenched and brittle elegance.

Everything that happens does so offstage. On stage in three acts what we get are updates on careers started or broken, plus an increasing sense of chilly betrayal. Each of these students has somehow (ailed to find in the other four the undy-ing roof-club friendship that was L promised at the outset, and that failure is underlined by a succession of cheery pop songs that a talented cast (Beverley Hills, Mark McGann, Felicity Montagu, Mi-chael Mueller, Gary Olsen) sing a capella in counterpoint to the dia

'Stone Guest' Returns

By Henry Pleasants

LONDON — Alexander Dargomizhsky's "The Stone Guest" has been called "the most influential failure in the history of opera." It's probably true, which explains why all but a very few of those hearing the new production by the English National Opera at the Coliscum will never previously have heard a note of it — and are unlikely ever to hear another after it finishes its run on May 21. It also explains why it has taken 115 years to reach a British audience.

Juan — or Don Giovanni — legend, it survives in the lexicons as the prototype of an approach to musical theater far more vividly — and less dogmatically — realized in Mussorgsky's "Boxis Godmov."

What Dargomizhsky (1813-1869) had in mind was something truer to life, more realistic, than the conventional operatic seequence of recitative, 55. aria, duet, trio, ensemble and chorus, which he found artificial, contrary to the norms of human behavior, and prone to exploitation by singers indulging in the display of vocal virtuosity at the expense of drama.

He chose, accordingly, a kind of arioso vocal line shaped to the accents, inflections and cadences of Pushkin's Russian verse, eschewing — with two inconsequential exceptions — any suggestion of the operatic "set piece." It reads better than it works. Tchaikovsky recognized the flaw: "If anything is more hateful and false," he wrote in his diary, "than attempting to introduce 'truth' into a realm of art where everything is based on 'pseudo,' and where 'truth' in the usual sense of the word is completely useless - I do not know it."

"The Stone Guest," unfinished at the composer's death, and co by Cesar Cui with Rimsky-Korsakov attending to the instrumentation, is not hateful, but neither is it musically rewarding. It needs all the help it can get from the staging, and in Keith Warner's production it gets a lot, imes too much. It gets spleadid help, too, from Graham Clark as Don Juan, Sally Burgess as the courtesan Laura and Kathryn Harries as Donna Anna (here the Commander's widow, not his daughter). One is grateful for the opportunity to hear "The Stone Guest" rather than just read about it, but the ENO has, possibly unwittingly, underscored Tchaikovsky's point in pairing it in repertoire with its Jonathan Miller production of Mozart's "Don Giovanni."

The English translation is by Joan Rodgers and Paul Daniel, the latter also the conductor. It is no disparagement of the translation to say that because Dargomizhsky's vocal utterance is so wedded to Pushkin, what we have simply does not and cannot sound right. And because of the avoidance of musically self-sufficient set pieces, the loss is irremediable. Further performances May 9, 14, and 21.

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

Mobile Managers Are Myth: Most MBAs Stay at Home

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ONDON — Surprisingly, the average person graduating with a masters degree from a top European business school stays on home ground. More predictably, those graduates earn as much as and often more than a middle manager in their sector, and they still prefer glamorous jobs in management consulting and investment banking to jobs in indus-try and manufacturing, according to a survey.

Even though the top European business schools stress career opportunities with international companies and attract recruiters mainly from multinationals to their campuses, the majority of their graduates take jobs at home, a trend that placement officers expect to continue this year.

For the MBA, the dream of becoming an expatriate manager is fading," said Wil-liam Carney, a professor at the International Management Institute in Geneva. The school granted 47 masters degrees in business administration to graduates of 20 different nationalities last year.

There is no European price for MBAs. The labor market is a national one.

"Companies are generally looking for nationals to work in their

Problems with work permits, the high cost of using expatriate instead of local managers and the availability of talented homegrown managers are factors that continue to encourage companies to hire German MBAs for West Germany and French MBAs for France. Such companies may send the managers abroad only after a two-year stint at headquarters.

Eighty-five percent of the students graduating from INSEAD go back to their home country and work from the company's head office in the international area," said Hans Detlef Werner, professor of international personnel management at INSEAD, the European Institute of Business Administration in Fontaine-

"There is no European price for MBAs," said Mr. Werner, who surveyed the careers and salaries of 164 MBAs who graduated from the school last year. "The labor market is a national one. The idea of a highly mobile MBA is a myth."

The percentage of MBAs staying home is even higher at some other business schools. Last year, only eight graduates out of 102 from London Business School went to work overseas.

OST stayed in Britain even though the average British MBA graduate could earn a higher salary by moving to France, West Germany or Switzerland, for example. According to the INSEAD survey, MBAs working in West Germany and Switzerland earn the most money. Their annual salaries average 101,385 DM (about $57,000) and 87,500 Swiss francs ($60,300). They were followed by MBAs in France, who earn an average of 299,570 French francs ($50,600), and managers in Britain, who earn £28,963 (about $48,800).

Of the 1986 graduates, 52 percent reported at least a 40 percent increase in real income after following the nine-month program at INSEAD, and 19 percent reported a doubling of their salary. According to placement officers, MBAs graduating this year continue to be more attracted by management consulting and investment banking, which tend to offer higher salaries than industry. Last year, 26 percent of MBAs from INSFAD went into management consulting, as did 32 percent of IMEDE's graduates and 27 percent of graduates from London Business School. "The reasons MRAs keep going into consulting are obvious," said Mr. Werner of INSEAD. "Management consultants pay well, the jobs are interesting and the consulting firms are good recruiters who outline good career possibilities.

Adrian Jackson, who runs the placement office at London Business School, said, "Management consultancies are extremely popular. They only hire MBAs; they have charisma, glamour and

An INSEAD MBA who works as a management consultant earns $45,154 on the average, an investment banker $46,943 and a manager working in manufacturing, $36,227.

Hachette Planning New Daily

Launch Possible In Fall of 1988

PARIS - Hachette SA, the French publishing and media gi-ant, said Tuesday that it plans to launch a national daily newspaper next year after failing in its bid to acquire a stake in the TF1 televi-

Yves Sabouret, the company's managing director, said at a news conference that Hachette has been considering launching a national paper for some time, and that feasibility studies on the project have so far been encouraging.

Although he did not detail the company's plans or the project's potential costs, Mr. Sabouret said that a mass-circulation newspaper could appear in the autumn of 1988, if studies proved satisfactory.

However, Mr. Sabouret denied reports that Hachette might be joined in launching a new newspaper by the British press baron, Robert Maxwell, and Francis Bouygues, the head of Bouygues SA, the big French construction

A Bouygyes-led consortium that included Mr. Maxwell beat out Hachette last month in a contest to acquire control of the state-owned TF1, France's biggest television channel. The network was put up for sale as part of the French government's program to privatize several state-controlled companies.

Mr. Sabouret said it was too early to tell whether losing the contest for a 50 percent stake in TF1 would be a source of regret or relief for

The minimum price for the stake was set by the government at 3 billion francs (about $500 million), and many analysts questioned whether the station could be made profitable enough over the 10-year term of the license to repay the

In another development, Mr. Sabouret said that Hachette would soon be launching a French edition of Time Inc.'s Fortune business magazine. He did not elaborate.

The decline in Europe came despite modest intervention by the Bundesbank and Swiss National Bank. Some dealers said there were continued fears that the U.S.-Japan meeting last week had done little to solve the trade dispute.

But in New York, "the dollar got some strength from indications that the three-year note auction went better than expected," said Marc Cohen, vice president at Re-public National Bank of New York. "There still is some bearish sentiment for the dollar, but we've

NEW YORK — Prices moved sharply higher on the New York Stock Exchange Tuesday in active trading, boosted by a firmer dollar, rising bond prices and futures-related buying.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which rose 5.82 points on Monday, shot up 51.85 points to 2.338.07 on Tuesday. It was the Dow's best performance since scoring a 66-point jump two weeks ago and its fourth-biggest daily point gain.

The stock market got off to a good start Tuesday morning as bond prices rose on the view that demand would be strong for this week's quarterly Treasury refinancing.

"The perception is that the refunding will go better than had been anticipated," said Eugene Peroni Jr., head of technical research at Janney Montgomery Scott Inc. in Philadelphia. The Treasury plans to sell $29 billion of U.S. notes and bonds in a three-part auction that began Tuesday.

Futures-related buying reinforced the stock market's upward trend, traders said. Wide premiums on index futures prompted some players to sell the futures while simultaneously purchasing the underlying stocks.

Mr. Peroni said that the stock market also was paying more attention to improved news on earnings. Rising corporate earnings and even moderate inflation that lets companies raise

Among the groups attracting strong buying interest Tuesday were pharmaceuticals. Squibb. for instance, was up 9 to 161½ in late trading of the iteration and the strong st after it said it expects 35 to 40 percent growth in 1987; in 1986, Squibb reported net earnings of 54.90 a share.

Blue chip issues led the stock market's advance, with IBM gaining 3% to 166% and Du-Pont up 4% to 114%.

Topping the most active list among NYSE issues was USX Corp., which gained ½ to 29%. Among stocks reaching new highs was Alcoa, up ½ to 49%. General Motors, up ½ to 91%, and Motorola, up 21/2 to 62.

Among technology issues, Hewlett-Packard rose 3½ to 62 and Unisys was up 5% to 125.

Drug, metals and airline stocks also moved higher. Among the most active in those categories were Eli Lilly, up 4½ to 97½; Phelps Dodge, up 2½ to 35½; and Allegis, up 2¾ to 67½.

Chevron Seeks Payment By Sudan for Research

Agence France-Presse

KHARTOUM, Sudan — Chevron Corp. is demanding $150 million from Sudan following the decision of the government here to terminate a joint venture with the U.S. oil giant, Energy Minister Adam Madibu said Tuesday. The indemnity would cover the cost of designs and research work for a pipeline that White Nile Petroleum Co. was to build to move crude from the southwest part of the country to Port Sudan on the Red Sea, he said.

Iberia has made fast friends of business travellers all over the globe. Each year, in fact, we fly more than 13 million people, travelling a total of more than 9,200,000 miles. To 81 different cities throughout the world.

We know that to many a weary business flyer, the hours they spend with us on-board are frequently the only restful hours they will spend that day. Which is why liberia's "Business Class" welcomes travellers with that special touch that turns a routine business trip into a pleasurable journey.

A select bottle of fine wine from Iberia's reknown wine cellar-in-the-sky. A kind gesture, like offering a soft pillow and cozy blanket. Our new catering service that is always accompanied by a warm smile and gracious style. These are the elements that create that very special atmosphere on-board an Iberia flight. Turning Iberia's Business Class into a world class flying experience.

The next time you fly, ask your Trave! Agent about Iberia. You could not make a more sound business decision.

THE BEST CONNECTIONS IN THE WORLD MEAN NOTHING IF AN AIRLINE FORGETS THE HUMAN ONE.

that further appreciation of the pound will erode the competitive-ness of British exports, eclipsing perhaps the brightest economic prospects the country has enjoyed in almost a decade. Despite three half-point cuts in the base rate since early March that theoretically made investments in pound-denominated securities less attractive, the pound has been climbing steadily against both the dollar and the Deutsche mark.

Bundesbank Keeps Key Rate Steady at 3.8%

FRANKFURT - The Bundesbank left a key moneymarket lending rate unchanged Tuesday at 3.8 percent, despite some speculation that a cut would follow rate changes announced by the United States and Japan last week.

The 28-day repurchase rate -offered with securities as collateral - remained unchanged ahead of the meeting Thursday of the central bank's policymaking committee.

The United States has pressed West Germany and Japan to lower rates to stimulate their economies to absorb more imports. This would help cut the U.S. trade deficit and boost the dollar.

Last week, Japan announced it was pushing short-term rates lower, while the U.S. central bank confirmed a rise in rates.

Despite years of trying to crack the Japanese market. American parts makers exported only about $230 million worth of components to Japanese automakers last year. That compares with the $2.5 billion worth of parts that American automakers are importing from Japan. In the United States, the Japanese car companies have been getting more than 50 percent of the parts they need from home, running up an import bill of $4 billion in 1986. And while Ford is the only company now buying parts from Japanese plants in the United States, GM and Chrysler executives indicate that they will, too. Echoing his counterparts at GM and Ford, David Platt, Chrysler's vice president of procurement. "Quality, cost and delivery speed are the real issues, not nationality.

That is not how some American businessmen and members of Congress see it. They liken the struggle taking shape in auto parts to the early stages of Japanese-American competition for domination of the semiconductor industry, where the Japanese now have the upper hand in making computer chips.

These businessmen and legislators view the American auto parts industry - with its 2,300 companies ranging from big producers of batteries and brakes to small, family-owned gasket makers — as a cornerstone of American manufacturing. Lately, that view has made auto parts one of the hot topics in

U.S. Steelmakers Export To Japan, Reversing Trend

DETROIT - After decades of getting bashed by imports, American steelmakers are turning the tables on their biggest foreign rival. Buoyed by a falling dollar and by cost-cutting measures that have made them far more competitive, they are starting to export U.S. made steel in large quantities to Japan for the first time in memory. Industry executives acknowledged that their ability to export steel to Japan, which traditionally has been the largest single exporter of steel to the United States, is due largely to the 73 percent rise in the Japanese ven against the dollar in the past 19 months. This makes American goods cheaper in Japan and Japanese prodacts more expensive in the United States. USX Corp., the largest American steelmaker, is now preparing to have its steel certified for entry into Japan by the Japanese government, its chairman. David M. Roderick, said Monday. The company plans to ship 20,000 to 40,000 tons of steel from its works in Gary, Indiana, to Japan in 1987. Officials of Bethlehem Steel Corp. said Monday that the company began to export steel to Japan last November. Industry sources said that Bethlehem shipped about 30,000 tons of low-grade steel to Japan in November and January.

Although they represent a dramatic turnaround, the American steel xports to Japan will be small compared to Japan's steel shipments to the United States, which totaled 4.4 million tons in 1986.

diator and air conditioner plant in ness," said Ralph Reins, president Battle Creek.

So far, the American companies seem to be losing the battle. United States, ITT Corp. was eager to make the fuel and hydraulic lines for their cars. But try as they might, executives of ITT's Higbie Manu-suppliers in Japan competitive with Gates have built a plant in this country. This factor, combined with the shipping costs, may be the reason for our early success." Fewer than 30 Japanese parts makers have operations in the United States. But by the end of the decade, the number will swell to 300, according to American and Japanese estimates. One reason for this expected growth is that the Japanese automakers, who are expanding production in the United States, want their suppliers close by. The dollar's fall against the yen, which has made imports from Japan more expensive, is also drawing them. The American market is especially alluring to Japanese parts makers because they are suffering from production overcapacity.

Aside from flooding the United States with exported auto parts. they are establishing parts production in the domestic market, largely to calm rising protectionist senti-ments in Washington.

"We either had to expand in Japan or in the United States, and it did not make sense to add capacity in Japan," said Ryozo Hayashi of Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry. In many cases, Japanese parts companies are coming to the Unitgovernments eager to have the new jobs for their constituents.

Despite such support, the parts plants that the Japanese are building in the United States are generating new trade frictions.

U.S. 3-Year Note Auction Said to Reflect Lukewarm Demand

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Treasury's auction Tuesday of $10 billion worth of three-year notes produced a higher-than-expected average yield of 7.91 percent as the government hegan its crucial $29 billion spring refunding. It was the highest yield since February 1986.

The yield reflected lukewarm demand, analysts said, and did not bode well for the $9.75 billion of 10-year notes and $9.25 billion of 30year bonds on offer Wednesday and Thursday.

In when-issued trading earlier Tuesday, the notes were trading at a higher price to yield 7.85 pared with comparable Japanese issues. percent on rumors that a Japanese investor had bought $3 billion of the issue.

The anctions are widely being viewed as a test of Japanese institutional investors' interest in U.S. Treasury securities, and their view on the direction of the dollar. In the past several quarterly auctions, these big Japanese investors have bought at least one-third of the 10- and 30-year issues on offer, elping the United States to finance its budget deficit without boosting interest rates.

But the dollar's sharp fall against the yen has dampened Japanese enthusiasm, analysts said, despite vields at least 5 percentage points higher on 10-year U.S. government securities com-

T HE ways of book publishing being as they are, the immensely gifted young British writer Timothy Mo made his American debut two years ago not with his first novel but his second: "Sour Sweet," an irresistible book about a Chinese family living in London and learning - among many other things - how to cope with the alien Western culture. "Sour Sweet" was enthusiastically reviewed in the United States, acquired a small but ardent readership, and aroused much curiosity about Mo's first novel, provocatively if enigmatically-titled "The Moukey King." Now Mo's first novel and his third, "An insular Possession," have been published by two American houses. They turn out to be works of strikingly different character, though both deal with Mo's persistent theme of East-West cultural dissimilarities, Readers who took pleasure in "Sour Sweet" will find themselves in familiar territory in "The Monkey King," another novel about Chinese domes "An Insular Possession," on the other hand, is a sprawling, ambitious historical novel whose central characters are Americans and whose narrative method is calculatedly - indeed, almost ostentatiously — old-fashioned.

"An Insular Possession" is to be admired not merely for its ambition but also for Mo's apparent determination not to repeat himself, but to venture into new and risky territory. "The Monkey King" and "Sour Sweet," though different in many particulars, have much in common: Not merely does each depict a Chinese family coming to terms with the West, but each is about a marriage that begins with discomfort and suspicion yet slowly warms into mutual respect and even love; further, each is written with a deft blend of affection and wry dispassion that produces a jaunty, distinctive tone. Though these first two novels are essentially domestic, each contains strong undertones of corruption and violence. These come to the fore in "An Insular Possession," which is set in Canton, Macao and Hong Kong during the 1830s and '40s. Within its large cast of characters, the principal ones are two young Americans, Walter Eastman and Gideon Chase, who have come to China as representatives of traders and who soon become the passionate opponents of the new trade into which their superiors direct them: opium. The substance and happiness of a few individuals, they write. "are founded on the stupefaction of the intellects, the wasting of the bodies, and the misery; of the unoffending families of a mass of wretched addicts."

That feeling of inevitability is also fed by the fact that the recent incidents are only the latest in what historians may in short, there is a widespread feeling that, for the letes, basketball's Len Bias and football's Don Rogers, died last summer from the drug. But Ueberroth, who drew criticism a year ago for saying that baseball was "virtually a drug-free sport," said he has recently fined "some teams" $250,000 for failing to report information about drug use among players. He declined to identify the teams.

But the conclusion about the permanent status of cocaine in sports also reflects a sense of frustration, a belief that further progress is impossible without more cooperation from others in and out of the sports establishment. In some cases, that frustration centers on union-management disputes. In others, it is aimed at the failure of the federal government to come to grips with what has often been called a drug epidemic.

The history of how sports leagues have dealt with

That syndrome has played itself out on the cocainesports scene largely around the issue of mandatory testing. While both Ueberroth and Rozelle tried to get it for all players, neither has persuaded the players' union, save for one scheduled test for all football players in training camp. While Rozelle says he believes increased tests would be an "important tool" to fighting drug use and is still pressing on the issue. Ueberroth says he no longer believes andespread testing is necessary.

"I don't think mandatory testing for all baseball players is desirable." Ueberroth said last week.

Instead of testing, the leagues increasingly cite education, peer pressure and the threat of banishment - which each uses, under different rules - as reasons for believing that fewer players are using cocaine. But some players are not sure how many of their peers are using cocaine.

"It should be on the decline, considering the consequences," said Don Baylor of the Boston Red Sox, "But sometimes I wonder if players realize what's going on. You don't even know if the guy in the next locker is doing drugs."

Buck Williams of the New Jersey Nets said some players protected others who were using drugs. "There's a code of silence," Williams said, adding that the indictments in Phoenix, based largely on Walter Davis's testimony, might force new attitudes.

Perhaps another reason the leagues have accepted the inevitability of some drug use is that the sports have weathered the scandals that have erupted to date, Instead of watching the public's being driven away by

The initial shock, horror and prediction of the New York Mets specified and the commissioners and union leaders all express and the commissioners are commissioners. tough, half think I'm not tough enough." The public doesn't speak with one voice," said David Stern, the NBA commissioner, "Some boo, some cheer,

But, the commissioners say, what the public demands is sense that the leagues are dealing with the problem. They want it cleared up, "Rozelle said, "but fans are also anxious to forgive."

One result of that sense is how the commissioners view the drug problem now. Ueberroth, who said in 1985 that drug use was his sport's most serious problem, now puts such routine business matters as finances, structure and planning at the top of the list.

"Initially, we went through a period of 'Oh, my goodness gracious." Stern said of basketball's reaction in the late 1970s and early 1980s. "Now we know it's a reflection of what's going on in society. Sure it's a problem for us. But it's not the threatening problem it was."

By far the most common observation among sports executives is that the use of drugs among athletes reflects the problem in society as a whole. Last year, statistics compiled by the National Institute on Drug Abuse showed that more than 22 million Americans have reported using cocaine.

There is no real surprise among sports league and union executives that all the education and other measures have failed to completely stop the problem, given that society is bedeviled by other problems that seem easier to solve.

LONDON - Soccer abounds with lapdogs Pavlovian in their responses to coaches' orders. At this time of year, countless of them run victory laps of honor. But genuine Lapps as sporting heroes? There are a couple.

Tord and Tommy Holmgren came down from Polokournas, a village near the Arctic Circle, to join IFK Göteborg 10 years ago. Coached and coaxed in the Swedish manner, the brothers shared in IFK's 1982 UEFA Cup triumph. But while success tore that side apart, while others reaped fortunes in Italy, the Holmgrens had gone as far as they are meant to go.

On Wednesday, rebuilt Göteborg again contests the UEFA Cup final, again with the Holmgrens at the heart of it.

Tord, at 29 the elder by two years, is the aggressor, taking games by the scruff of the neck. Tommy is mercurial — a classic dribbler, a gifted free-kick specialist and header whose one chance at the big time evaporated when Goteborg demanded £400,000 ($672,000) for his transfer.

I haven't much information on how that went down among the people of the Arctic Circle. Nor on how prevalent cup final fever runs among Lapps (according to my dictionary, a dwarfish, nomadic, Mongoloid race occupying the region from Northern Norway across north Sweden and Finland to the Kola Peninsula of Russia). The Holmgrens have become regular Swedish internationals and integral to the resilience and reorganization by which Göteborg and its opponent, Dundee United, adorn a linals the glamourous Eu-repeans could not reach. Four other Göteborg stalwarts form the nucleus of the new side. Goalkeepe, Thomas Wernersson, veteran fullbacks Ruben Svensson and Stig Fredriksson, and sweeper Glenn Hysen. Hysen is back after twice chasing foreign riches. He failed a youth trial with Hamburg, the team IFK beat home and away in the 1982 final. And in 1983 he had an unhappy spell at PSV Emdhoven before returning to partner his intended replacement, Peter Larsson. Few of us survive our successors, never mind hit it off with them. Yet Hysen and Larsson --and virtually every other Gote-borg defender - share the knack He spent 12 months in the reof scoring vital goals in the coun-terpunching that outwitted Inter serves, out of favor and so out of pocket he contemplated abandon-Milan in the quarterfinals.

The Milanese giant could buy ont Göteborg as a nursery club. But so Barcelona could purchase Dundee United and write it off as a tax loss. Dundee, as astute as Göteborg at producing, selling and regenerating, won in Barcelona with a team costing a total of £400,000 (against the Catalans' £12 million squad).

So Europe's first club finale this season is between frugal opponents who make others pay. Anyone who predicts a result is foolhardy. The Swedes like to take the heat off, to probe with stealth never recognizing a lost cause. Dundee is no place for prima donnas. Goalkeeper Billy Thomson, big and blond, likes to dominate his box. Yet like most at Dundee, he is a dominated man.

persuaded him to persevere. All Dundee players learn to cope with the caustic tongue of Manager Jim McLean. The better they are, the harsher his criticism. Paul Sturrock and Eamonn Bannon especially raise McLean's blood pressure.

Sturrock ran so much as a boy that he once was confined to bed for six weeks with exhaustion; he is so dedicated - so atypical a Scot -- that he spurns alcohol, red meat, dairy produce, tea and coffee. Yet McLean "tears him to shreds" over a misplaced pass. Bannon, one of the few for whom and patience. The Scots build from passion, from industry, from McLean spent cash, once shrugged off his criticism with: "Och, everyone makes mistakes."

But players run for him, work for him, win for him. McLean, in return, is a worksholic whose keen eye will have spotted weaknesses, if weaknesses there be, in the Göteborg strategy.

Two slight mellowings in him have released the team of late: He has stopped shouting them on from the dugout, has stopped, as he admits, "treating them as pup-

And he has allowed humor to interrupt his ferocious intensity. Players have been astonished at the relaxed mood on away trips of their teetotal, nonsmoking boss, a 48-year-old cardiac victim-in-themaking.

The secret? The press. Those disruptive scribes challenged McLean and his staff to matches against the media, which lead to lopsided scores in McLean's favor and a recent hand-written notice from him: "Press team takes dope test — result, 11 dopes."
The difference between the two teams is that McLean has stayed 15 years to build and rebuild by his own hand, while Göteborg has lost a manager or two. Gunder Bengtsson, the current manager, was assistant in 1982 before leaving to steer Valerengen to the Norwegian champion-ship and then returning. His senior in 1982, Sven-Goran

Eriksson, defected for Benfica and then Roma, and this very week resigned from the Italian club after its failure to pursue Napoli toward the championship. Napoli needs to win at home against Fiorentina on Sunday, or away against Ascoli the following week, to win the title for the first time. Diego Maradona will be fulfilled, and by way of premature celebration Napoli has agreed £2.3 million for Brazilian striker Car eca from São Paulo. Some force instructor or policeman. His wife they threaten to be.

At the World Cup in Mexico, Careca (who draws his name from a circus clown) was fast, lithe and ever-clusive. He proved the goalscorer Brazil had struggled through two World Cups to find; from far fewer opportunities, he finished the tournament with five goals, the equal of Maradona.

What a Latin mix awaits Napoli's supporters, who have promptly been asked to pay 30 percent more for tickets in what should be a European Cup season next year.

There they might well encounter Bayern Munich, which leads the Bundesliga by three points. Munich has a game in hand due to a postponement last week while the Olympic Stadium was in use for Pope John Paul's ceremonial beatification of Rupert Mayer. Pope stops play is a new line

File Under Whatnot

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — A new fad is making lists of things about which every badly educated American should know just a tiny little bit. I disappreve.

I was taught that a little learning is a dangerous thing. As a result, I refuse to learn just a little bit about anything. My policy is: Learn a lot, or nothing at all.

For instance, I probably know more about Hannibal's strategy for smashing the Roman center at the Battle of Cannae than is absolutely necessary to succeed in most lines of work, especially professional wrestling and journalism, but I refuse to learn what Vanna White is.

When this very question came up for decision, it was quickly settled. By pursuing the Vanna White in-quiry, I realized, I might end up ing even more about Vanna White than I knew about Hannibal at Cannae.

"Depressing," I said to myself. "Better give it the whatnot treatment" This refers to my method of determining whether a typically educated American should be rated civilized or hopeless. The test is not whether you know what something is, but whether you know what it is

The civilized person, for instance, may not know what "soul food" is but he knows what it is not. He knows it is not a group of rock musicians. With the whatnot method you can survive American life without being exposed as an ignoramus. As you would be if somebody said, "Let's get some soul food," and you replied, "It would be a waste of money because the stereo is broken."

In the same way, it is enough to know that Vanna White is not a shade of house paint. Theo Lippman Jr., writing on this subject in The Baltimore Sun, guesses that many products of American schools would not know who Pontius Pilate was or understand a reference to "The Flying

Why should we? Though a bit loggy myself about "The Flying Dutchman," I am never uneasy when the subject comes up because I know what "The Flying Dutch-man" is not; namely, Henry Kiscans know that "The Twilight Zone" is an old television show than know that Pontius Pilate was the Roman governor who approved the legal proceedings that condemned Jesus. If so, I would be

For years I have heard people with bulging eyeballs speak of "The Twilight Zone" and have known that they were not talking about a pass defense used in the National Football League.

On Pontius Pilate I am extremely well versed and harbor strong opinions which I like to expound when comparing Pilate's character to Hannibal's, but I do not insist that others know anything about him except that he was not the Roman general whom Hannibal defeated

Considering that American schools abandoned the teaching of history years ago, as well as education in the classics, we must not be too quick to cry "Imbecile!" when these old Roman, Carthaginian and Hebrew matters leave our friends looking confused.

My own whatnot standards here are very, very low. All any civilized person should be expected to know these days is that Achilles is not the name of a Greek carry-out dish, like falafel; that the fall of Troy does not refer to the autumnal season in an upstate New York town; and that Julius Caesar was not the owner of a gambling casino called

It is cruel to abuse people who suffer from typical American edu-cation. I chided my friend Kropotkin for this recently after he told me about meeting a man to whom World War I was news.

When Kropotkin mentioned "World War I" in conversation, the fellow cried: "World War I! I never knew there was a World War I!" Kropotkin then humiliated him by asking, "So why do you think we call World War II World War II?"

This man's problem was that he did not have World War I in his whatnot file. If he had, on hearing the words "World War I," he would have known it was not the biggest hit in board games between Monopoly and Trivial Pursuit, and kept his lip buttoned.

Play and Politics Meet at Lagos Polo Club

By James Brooke New York Times Service

LAGOS — Saturday afternoon at the Lagos Polo Club: The crack of mailet against ball is followed by the thunder of hooves across an old British Army parade ground. On the clubbouse veranda, men in odhpurs and riding boots comment on the chukkers in polished Oxbridge accents. But similarity to the past ends there. Almost all the players on the field came of in 1960. Yet the new generation has embraced the old colonial sport as its own. "The last English player left last year," said Oladele da Rocha-Afoda as he sipped a chilled lime squash on the veranda. He

age since Nigeria gained its independence joined the club nearly 30 years ago.

The shifts da Rocha has seen on the field have reflected wider shifts within Nigeria, Africa's most populous country, with about 85 million people. In 1958, when he first rode under the crossed-mallets crest of the Lagos Polo Club, the virtually all-white institution was stamped by the snobbery of British Army officers and colonial civil servants toward "the commercials" - British businessmen. After independence, polo's depleted ranks were filled by an influx of Nigerian Army and police officers, fielded, according to British tradition, in sponsored teams. Today, there are no more government-sponsored teams and polo is largely pursued here by successful young

"This was the first year we didn't have an army team," said O. O. Ogunbanjo, the club secretary, of the Lagos Polo Tourna-ment in February, which drew four-man teams from eight clubs.

With his gold cuff links, tailored London shirt and business card printed "Solicitor," Ogunbanjo seems to represent the new generation of athletic and affluent Nigerians drawn to the ancient sport.

Founded in the 1930s, the polo club here has become Nigeria's largest; it has 55 playing members, as against about 20 in 1980. An additional 300 nonplaying members bolster the club's reputation as a meeting ground for Nigeria's political and so-cial elite.

Each February, the nine-day tourna-ment is the major social event in Lagos. After the games, elegantly turned-out men and women flock to a string of parties -Jazz Night, Calypso Night, etc. "The beautiful women come out like bees to honey," said the club's secretary, known simply as Toks. Sponsors for the tournament's 12 trophies and the advertisers in its brochure include many of Nigena's largest banks, insurance companies and industrial enterprises.

The social cachet of polo is underlined by a new television and billboard campaign for a beer company. In the advertisements, a triumphant polo player surrounded by admiring women holds a trophy.

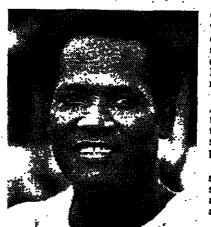

In such a setting, Nigerian polo takes on a political undercurrent. The polo grounds are across a street from Dodan Barracks, the command center of Nigeria's military government. And important political figures have on occasion defended the club's oasis of greenery and privilege from the pressure of a mushrooming Third-World city. "At one time we had a lot of anti-polo people - people who thought it was straw-berries and cream," recalled Ahmach Yakubu, the secretary of Kaduna Polo Club and one of Nigeria's highest-rated players.

In the 1970s, a state governor proposed turning the polo field into a low-income housing development. An influential northern general, who was also the father of a top player, decisively quashed the idea. Polo's political clout stems from a similarity between officials in the military government and the country's top polo players; many are Moslems from the north.

"We are born with horses — we grow up riding without saddles," said Idris Ibrahim, a northerner and the captain of the Lagos

Club. Indeed, a northern atmosphere prevails among the club's bustling community of grooms, stableboys, farriers and grass sellers. The high woven hats of the northerners are a frequent sight, and banter in Hausa, the lingua tranca of northern Nigeria is in the air.

The president of the Lagos Chib, Belio Ahmed, said he grew up riding horses in the northern city of Kano. "The youth in the south are now picking it up," Ahmed said of his club, where 60 percent of the player-members are northerners.

Members of the Lagos Polo Club have started importing Argentine ponies, con-sidered fleeter and more agile than Nigerian ponies, which are closer to Sudanese Noting that "polo is 75 percent pony," Toks said the new breeds are improving Nigerian play. But despite the fresh blood of horse and man, Nigeria ranks below the world's top polo powers: Argentina, the United States, Britain and Mexico. Players here keep up with international play by circulating video cassettes of classic tour-

Addiction to polo has proved to be as strong in Nigeria as it is in other countries. A recent yearbook of the Nigerian Polo Association printed this memorial: "In loving memory of our dearly departed col-league, His Excellency Alhaji Shehu Mu-hammed Kangiwa, the late Governor of Sokoto State, whose tragic death occurred on the 17th of November, 1981, during the 1981 Kaduna Annual Polo tournament. He died while playing polo with a handicap of

Painting by de Kooning Sold for $3.6 Million

"Pink Lady," an Abstract Expressionist painting by Willem de V Kooning, was sold Monday for $3.6 million, tying the record for the work of a living artist, according to a spokesman for Sotheby's in New York. The total sales -$18.9 million - set a record for any auction of contemporary art as well, said a Sotheby's representative. The price paid for "Pink Lady" ties the price paid for a Jasper Johns work, "Out The Window," in 1986. The previous highest price paid for a de Kooning was $1.9 million. The buyer of the de Kooning work was not im-mediately identified.

Jean Harris, 63, the woman convicted and imprisoned for the murder of Scardale Diet developer Dr. Herman Tamower, was presented with the Westchester Library Association's nonfiction award for "Stranger in Two Worlds," her book on their relationship. Two association officials gave the bronze medal to Mrs. Harris in a ceremony at the Bedford Hills Correctional Facility, New York, where she is serving a 15-year-to-life sentence for the March 10, 1980, shooting death of Tarnower, 69.

The ashes of the filmmaker Orson Welles will be buried Thursday. on a retired bullfighter's ranch in southern Spain. Beatrice Welles told reporters that Spain, where her to father lived during the 1960s, was his favorite country and he wanted to be buried there. She said the ashes of Welles, who died of a heart attack in 1985, would be interred at a ranch near Malaga belonging to his close friend, the matador Autonio Ordonez.

Robert Maxwell, head of Britain's second largest newspaper publishing group, will lead a government-backed trust in Britain to raise £50 million (about $83 million) for research into fighting AIDS, it was announced Tuesday.

. The showplace home of the late entertainer Liberace in Las Vegas is being offered for sale for $2.7 million. Liberace died in February at his Palm Springs, California, home of complications of AIDS. He was 67.
